Seat belt law makes sense

The new seat belt law not only saves lives and injuries, it saves taxpayers' money.

I am the only unbuckled backseat survivor in a fatal car crash.

I chose not to wear my seat belt, and I'm living with the consequences of making a poor choice for the rest of my life.

Having been 22 years old at the time of the crash, it was a very humbling experience to be in a wheelchair, temporarily paralyzed on half of my body, with memory loss and wearing adult diapers.

One of my sorority sisters, had she been wearing a seat belt, would have survived, too.

It's a small price of taking a few seconds to buckle up than to live (maybe) with lifelong injuries that could have been prevented.

The seat belt law just makes sense.
